03 · MESSAGING

Confused people do not buy. Resonance over persuasion.

THE FRAME

You are not persuading. You are being recognized.

THE FORMULA

I work with [ideal clients] who [specific problem] so that they can [desired outcome] without [the sacrifice they fear].

THE THREE LAYERS OF THEIR PROBLEM

External — the practical, factual problem. Internal — how it makes them feel about themselves. Philosophical — why it is wrong that they should have to put up with it. Most new coaches write only the external. The internal is where recognition happens.

THE TEST OF A GOOD PAIN PHRASE

Not “stress” but “answers email at eleven at night and feels guilty either way”.

THE THREE ANSWERS – HAVE THESE COLD

What do you do?	One line, the formula
Who is it for?	The specific group, not the category
How is this different from therapy?	Therapy works on what’s in the way; coaching works on where you’re going. Structured, goal-led, with an end point — and if something clinical needs attention I’ll say so and help you find the right person

STRIP THE CLINICAL VOCABULARY

Presenting, ruminating, dysregulated, processing. These belong to the other lane and they tell a reader they are being assessed rather than understood.
