

Structure & Offer

04 · STRUCTURE, OFFER & PRICING

Until perceived value exceeds price, you should never reveal the price.

ONE PAGE, NOT A SYLLABUS

Modules, in order, with what changes for the client at the end of each, and a total length. If you are writing unit titles, you have gone a level too deep.

THE BUILD, STOPPED EARLY

Transformation as a question → the questions that must be answered → cut what isn't necessary → sequence by how change actually happens → module titles → duration. Module one is always mindset. Aim for 8–12 weeks. Stop there.

THE EVIDENCE ON LENGTH

The best available evidence does not show longer coaching producing better outcomes. A short program is a design decision, not a compromise.

THE FOUR LEVERS OF PERCEIVED VALUE

How much they want it	Lift — use their words
How likely they think it is	Lift — named process, written structure, your years, a guarantee
How long it takes	Lower — 8–12 weeks, first result inside a fortnight
How much effort it costs them	Lower — do more of it with them

THE GUARANTEE

Conditional, not unconditional. Complete the work and if you're not satisfied, a full refund. It transfers the risk and describes the behavior that produces the result. One page, plain words, checked against your state's rules.

THE TWO NUMBERS

A founding price for your first three clients, and the price after that — roughly double. The gap is an exchange, not a discount. After every three clients at a price, it goes up.

THE FOUR-SECOND RULE

Say the number. Then stop talking. The silence feels enormous and lasts about four seconds.
